This one-and one-half-story Tudor Revival dwelling faces east onto the secluded remaining segment of Old Hammonds Ferry Road north of the Baltimore Washington Parkway. It is clad on the first story with oversized brown bricks. The upper story is stucco. The complex roofline includes multiple front gables, a shed dormer on the north slope, and two gabled dormers on the south slope. A massive exterior brick chimney rises up the main elevation. A one-story sunroom on the southeast corner features a curved slope on the left side of its gabled roof. The two pairs of six-light wood-casement windows are topped by brick arches infilled with stone cladding. The glazed front door is located in a projecting gabled vestibule to the right of the front elevation that is clad with stone. The three-over-one and one-over-one wood sash windows throughout appear original.

This well-maintained dwelling is a good example of Tudor Revival style popular in residential design in the 1920s and 1930s. Clad in brick, stone, and stucco, it has a unique and eclectic design. It appears to have had few alterations since its original construction. Nevertheless, it does not appear to embody the architectural or historical significance necessary to meet the criteria for listing in the National Register of Historic Places. It is therefore recommended not eligible.
